	PRE- OR NON- INDO-EUROPEAN RITES, WHICH SURVIVED THE INDO-EUROPEANS
Stelae	 RO -5000				Stelae are not an Indo-European cultural marker. Stelae were brought back again to Europe by the Altaian Cumanians
Kurgans					At Shanidar, North Iraq, a Neanderthal man was inhumed in -100.000. The Cro Magnons, who speak an Indo-European dialect, still inhume.

Red Ochre					Red ochre was spread onto the Venus of Willendorf (~23000), the terracotta head with a conical hat, in the Levant (~2000); the Finnish cairns (~1500), the skull of an Altaian.

Drink Rite				See the chapter "The Longobards", in the book	016
Drink rite				The peculiarity of these vessels is in their instability, which determines their special function.	017
Drink Rite				Hundreds of other bronze cauldrons similar to the ones of Arzan have been found, from Hungary to Korea, dated from ~620 to the 13th century AD. The Greek craters were terracotta copies, beautiful, but impractical.	018
Handle					019
Vessel				The most ergonomic vessels ever were still the most popular when I was a child.	020
Phiale				The rays departing from a central sun were not only a religious symbol, but also contributed to make durable a dish made from thin foil: a trick still used to day	021
